				ELIGIBLE GRADES A-F
				COURSE DESC: The seminar explores the musical-aesthetic thought outside the Western world, from ancient sources to contemporary debates. The readings include mythological, religious, literary, and philosophical texts, both traditional and modern. The areas of musical creativity that will be discussed comprise classical traditions and popular genres, including the uses of music in mass entertainment, ideological propaganda, and devotional practices. Literary, visual, and video materials will help illustrate the attitudes towards music in these cultures. In addition, the seminar will pursue a methodological theme of considerable urgency: Do the existing historical and contemporary approaches do justice to the uniqueness and complexity of music-philosophical theorizing in the cultures of, for example, India, China, or Bali? What kind of an approach would allow us to avoid the pitfalls of comparativism, Orientalism, and distorting biases in general? What kind of a philosophical perspective can assure at once a meaningful multilateral dialogue among world musical cultures, and their resistance to the levelling effects of globalization? A variety of texts, both by authors from a relevant cultural tradition and by Euro-American commentators, will serve as a platform for addressing these questions.

				REQUISITE: ANTH 1010 and Sr
				COURSE DESC: This course is intended to give students an overview of the two contributing cultures and their musics found in this country, from the songs of rural Appalachia and New England to the African music brought by the slaves; to the musics that grew out of those traditions, from the popular musics of the cities to the songs of Latin Americans and European minorities. We will trace the way these musics live in the modern city, in the academic world and in contemporary music society. (Nettl, 1976) The student will be introduced to the study of music as a manifestation of human need and a representation of culture. The course uses music as an index to understand American culture while it introduces the student to various concepts in the field of ethnomusicology. (Nettl, 1976)

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	REQUISITE:
				COURSE DESC:	Provides students current knowledge and issues related to reliability and validity of contemporary issues in augmentative and alternative communication. Students will describe challenges related to subject selection in AAC research.
HSP	RCS	CSD	8968	Grant Writing in CSD	SEM	SE	3	0		I	G50		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	REQUISITE: Permission required
				COURSE DESC:	Provides students with information about the importance of grantsmanship as a core ability required of academic-research faculty. Focuses on the content and process of strong, competitive grant writing, and presents an overview of a wide variety of potential funding mechanisms in communications sciences and disorders.
HSP	RCS	CSD	8969	Lexical Acquisition in Children	SEM	SE	3	0		I	G50		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	REQUISITE: Permission required
				COURSE DESC:	Provides students with detailed information about typical lexical (semantic) development, how the mental lexicon is organized, theoretical explanations of word learning, and word learning difficulties in children. Both theoretical and clinical perspectives will be provided. Seminar is reading and discussion intensive.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F, PR
				COURSE DESC:	Deals with the application of physiological principles to the study of disease and injury, with particular attention to cellular injury, inflammation and repair, and immunity. Emphasis is given to the implications of pathophysiology for physical therapy evaluation and treatment. The general principles of pathophysiology will be applied to a limited set of specific examples in this class. However, subsequent clinical and systems-based courses in this curriculum will assume a working understanding of the concepts presented in this class. Will also prepare the student to treat patients with select systemic conditions, whether or not those conditions are the primary reason for physical therapy referral. Emphasis will be placed on identification of the patient with systemic pathologies requiring further consultation or referral to other health care providers through principles of differential diagnosis.

Students will examine the following topics as they relate to aging and families: historical perspectives, demographic trends, theoretical frameworks, research methods, intimate relationships, intergenerational relationships, and life course transitions. Particular attention will be given to the multiple contexts affecting and being affected by families in middle to later life. Students also will have the opportunity to participate in a service-learning project that complements the course content and allows for reflection on personal development as it relates to the concepts learned in class.

HSP	SPH	CFS	5670	Children, Families, Stress and Trauma	LEC	EL	3	0		N	G40		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	The purpose is to help students understand the nature and impact of traumatic experiences on children, adolescents, adults, and families. Examines the history, scope, and impact of human trauma, resiliency, and adaptation. It explores traumatic stress syndromes, vicarious trauma, and universal traumatic response patterns. Considers the impact of these experiences from a biopsychosocial and developmental perspective: psychological trauma has somatic consequences. Treatment, intervention, adaptation, resiliency, recovery, attachment, personal meaning, and the spiritual aspects of trauma are explored. Intended to provide students with a clear understanding of the physical and psychological processes involved in adaptation and integration and how untreated trauma can lead to lifelong pathology and dysfunction.

				COURSE DESC:
				The first of a two-course series that provides knowledge, concepts, and fundamental skills needed for beginning level practice in public and private child welfare. Focuses on interventions to protect children from abuse, neglect, and sexual abuse by strengthening, supporting, and empowering their families. Organized around four themes. First, content is provided on the mission and scope of child welfare practice, articulating the underlying philosophy and values that drive child welfare practice, and addressing cultural and relationship issues when working with families. Second, the course provides conceptual and practical information on identifying child maltreatment, assessing family needs and strengths, and determining both immediate and long-term risk to children of future maltreatment. Third, information is presented on case planning and applying a casework model to working with families. Fourth, content is presented on interviewing skills in child welfare setting, especially as these skills relate to family assessment and case planning activities.

				This is the second and final course in the undergraduate social work practice sequence. Develops the generalist intervention model and applies the model to working with families, groups, and communities, illustrating social work practitioners' roles of counselor, educator, broker, case manager, advocate, and introduces roles of mobilizer and evaluator. Content related to the promotion of social and economic justice with oppressed and disadvantaged populations is introduced, with special attention to social injustice among racial and ethnic minorities, the economically disenfranchised, Appalachians and GLBT people. Focuses on the analytical and interactional skills associated with the problem solving model, by continuing the research project begun in SW 4960, now consisting of data collection, data analysis, and reporting writing assignments. Attention is also given to selected skills associated with the roles of broker, teacher, and advocate in effecting macro-level change. Builds on the community analysis experience from the first semester by writing an individual grant proposal that addresses specific identified community problems. Grant proposals, as an aspect of advocacy and brokerage, are identified as a means of partially rectifying economic and social injustice. Ethical dilemmas in practice and issues of diversity will be highlighted.

Examine theories of causation of child abuse and neglect, issues in recognition, assessment, intervention, treatment, follow-up, and related issues of family violence and substance abuse. Incorporates discussion of social work values, ethics, and historical traditions in child welfare practice, including understanding issues of diversity for individuals and families. Consider child welfare policy issues, including advocacy issues, in relation to child protection, intervention with diverse populations, and treatment. The questions we are asking in this course are: Using an ecological perspective, what are the meanings of child abuse and neglect to individuals, to families, and to society? Understanding some of these meanings, what are some recommendations for social policy response?

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	The first of a two-course series that provides knowledge, concepts, and fundamental skills needed for beginning level practice in public and private child welfare. Focuses on interventions to protect children from abuse, neglect, and sexual abuse by strengthening, supporting, and empowering their families. Organized around four themes. First, content is provided on the mission and scope of child welfare practice, articulating the underlying philosophy and values that drive child welfare practice, and addressing cultural and relationship issues when working with families. Second, the course provides conceptual and practical information on identifying child maltreatment, assessing family needs and strengths, and determining both immediate and long-term risk to children of future maltreatment. Third, information is presented on case planning and applying a casework model to working with families. Fourth, content is presented on interviewing skills in child welfare setting, especially as these skills relate to family assessment and case planning activities.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	The second in a series of two child welfare courses. Continues with a family-centered and strength-based approach to child welfare services that addresses the developmental and permanence needs of children in the child welfare system. The Caseworker Core Training content is divided into five core modules covering: assessment in family-centered child protective services; investigative processes in family-centered child protective services; case planning and family-centered casework; child development and implications for family-centered child protective services; and separation, placement, and reunification in family-centered child protective services. Explores the phenomenon of traumatic stress as a topic of increasing importance in child welfare/social work practice and how secondary traumatic stress is derived from the social worker-client relationship. Allow social workers to prevent and intervene in secondary traumatic stress in themselves, colleagues, clients, and organizations.

				COURSE DESC:	The Osteopathic Clinical Anatomy Orientation allows all entering OU-COM students, regardless of their curricular track, to begin their training together, immersed for roughly four weeks in clinically-oriented study of human gross anatomy, with an integrated introduction to osteopathic manipulative medicine and evidence-based medicine. At the core of the course are the laboratory activities. Students will participate in 4 three-hour gross anatomy labs each week. These activities involve dissection of human cadavers, imaging studies, and discussion of clinical anatomy in an interactive laboratory setting. The structure of the human body is presented in a clinically relevant manner, providing correlations of normal anatomy to common disease states. The ultimate goal is to enhance clinical reasoning in the context of human gross anatomy. 1 to 2 one hour Anatomy/Palpation labs will occur each week to correlate with the anatomy dissections and landmark identification. Wednesdays are spent in the OMM lab with an introduction to relevant osteopathic manipulative diagnostic skills. A few key lectures will provide background for the laboratory studies and provide an introduction to evidence-based medicine.

				COURSE DESC:	Fundamentals in Clinical Osteopathic Medicine 1 and 2 are a series of courses devoted to assisting students in developing clinical skills necessary to work towards mastery of the AOA Core competencies. Fundamentals in Clinical Osteopathic Medicine 1 is a sixteen week course. The focus is on History and Physical (H&P), Osteopathic Manipulative Medicine (OMM) skills and Clinical and Community Experiences (CCE). Integral to all of these areas are psychosocial skills. Other components will guide the student in learning specific psychosocial and psychomotor skills, as well as reinforce the importance of an evidence-based approach to the clinical application in the practice of medicine. The format of the course incorporates clinical lab sessions, utilizing peers or simulated patients for practice in obtaining history and performing physical examinations. On occasion, learning activities will utilize real patients. Clinical cases in the concurrent Biomedical Sciences course are structured to foster learning objectives that enhance History and Physical exam skills. An ongoing thread in this course is the Problem Oriented Medical Record (POMR) and medical progress notes (SOAP notes) tools students need to develop and maintain excellent documentation of clinical encounters. The OMM lab component for this course is taught to PCC students in conjunction with the students in the CPC curriculum. Students will be assigned to one or more clinical faculty for 8 four-hour experiences per quarter to be given an opportunity to practice their developing clinical skills. They will also be assigned to community agency preceptors for 2 four-hour experiences per quarter in order to develop an understanding of the roles of non-physician personnel and health care services provided outside the hospital/physician's office. Objectives and activities for each community agency experience are available on the CCE website.

				COURSE DESC:	Fundamentals in Clinical Osteopathic Medicine 1 and 2 are a series of courses devoted to assisting students in developing clinical skills necessary to work towards mastery of the AOA Core competencies. Fundamentals in Clinical Osteopathic Medicine 2 is a twenty-week course. The focus is on History and Physical (H&P), Osteopathic Manipulative Medicine (OMM) skills and Clinical and Community Experiences (CCE). Integral to all of these areas are psychosocial skills. Other components will guide the student in learning specific psychosocial and psychomotor skills, as well as reinforce the importance of an evidence-based approach to the clinical application in the practice of medicine. 				COURSE DESC:	This six-week Neurology course offers students the resources and environment for learning the basic structure and function of the nervous system and the application of this knowledge to clinical cases of headache, altered consciousness, weakness, movement disorders and altered cognition. The cases encourage the student to develop neurological diagnostic skills based on principles of neuroanatomy, neurophysiology, neuropharmacology, neuropathology, infectious disease, and epidemiology. The skills of history taking and physical examination are reinforced in laboratory sessions on the neurology examination. Mastery of clinically relevant neuroanatomy is facilitated in lab sessions devoted to brain dissection. The cases also lead students into considerations of the psychosocial management, pharmacological treatment, OMM, surgery intervention, and rehabilitation of patients with neurological disorders.

Emphasis is placed on the major psychiatric disorders, including: their neuro-chemical basis, assessment, diagnosis, evidenced-based treatments including the pharmacology and clinical utilization of all classes of psychotropic medications as well as psychological interventions. The course is divided into three weekly modules: Anxiety Disorders, Mood and Childhood Disorders, and Psychotic/Personality Disorders. Students are expected to do significant outside reading based upon assignment for each learning topic and activity. Real patient interviews and case studies are utilized to assist the student in experiencing the reality and learning the distinguishing features of these disorders. 				COURSE DESC:	This five-week Endocrinology and Metabolism course presents an opportunity for students to delve into the major endocrine systems in the body, including the pituitary, thyroid, parathyroid adrenal and pancreatic glands. Students explore the regulatory mechanisms of the hormones secreted by these glands and the metabolic effects elicited by these hormones. A major focus of the course is the clinical relevance of hormonal signaling on bone metabolism, growth, and carbohydrate, lipid and amino acid metabolism. Hormonal control under normal physiological conditions is contrasted with disease states such as electrolyte imbalance, growth disorders, weight homeostasis and diabetes. By the end of this course, students will integrate and understand the underlying mechanisms by which these hormones act and how these signals are interpreted by tissues such as liver, bone, adipose, and muscle to coordinate metabolic changes in the body.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	CR, PR, F
				COURSE DESC:	This three-week Geriatrics course introduces Clinical Presentation Curriculum (CPC) students to key concepts essential to caring for older adults. The Block begins by presenting the aging demographic imperative. There are not enough geriatricians to care for this growing segment of the population. Therefore, it is critical that all medical students are trained to meet the needs of older citizens with complicated, overlapping, factors associated with chronic medical conditions. Older adults often have three or more chronic medical conditions, take multiple medications and respond to treatments and medications differently than do younger patients. This block targets these often complicated overlapping factors. An emphasis is placed on understanding the following: aging versus disease; geriatric syndromes and atypical presentation of disease; providing care across the continuum of locations: ambulatory, hospital, assisted living, nursing home, and home; comprehensive geriatric assessment; psychosocial and environmental considerations; pharmacology/prescribing practices; and advance directives.

The topics presented by our OUCOM director of faculty development will be: "giving constructive feedback". A weekly instructional hour designed to prepare these students to teach year 1 students as table trainers in the Osteopathic manipulative medicine lab will constitute the lecture portion of the course. One faculty development session will be provided fall quarter to focus honors students teaching skills. Each weekly lab period is 2 hours in length. During that lab each second year honors student will be supervising the progress and facilitating the understanding of six to eight year 1 students in a setting where faculty lead the lab and provide the resources to answer questions that the honors students have and/or questions year 1 students have with which the honors students need help. This allows the honors students to deepen their understanding and refine their palpatory skills following the adage, "see one, do one, teach one." A journal club will be scheduled once each quarter with review of articles relevant to Osteopathic philosophy, principles and practice. The honors students will have the opportunity to evaluate articles and exchange ideas with OMM faculty and post-graduate residents. 				COURSE DESC:	The Osteopathic Manipulative Medicine and Family Medicine Associateship is a one year program designed to provide interested osteopathic medical students an opportunity to serve as adjunct faculty to the Departments of Family Medicine and OMM, engaged in teaching, scholarly activity and clinical medicine. The goal of the associateship is to promote interest in osteopathic medical education and research by enhancing the development of teaching and understanding of osteopathic clinical skills. Associates will have the opportunity to improve upon these skills in several capacities as they serve as individual mentors, tutors, lab leaders, group facilitators and class lecturers. In order to increase skills in teaching and scholarly activity, associates may utilize individual mentoring, classes, or seminars in which they learn effective teaching techniques, facilitation skills, research methodology and organizational skills.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	CR, PR, F
				COURSE DESC:	The purpose of this course is to provide an early research experience for students who have successfully completed the Year 1 medical school curriculum. This course will complement the current Patient-Centered Continuum (PCC) and Clinical Presentation Continuum (CPC) curricula currently offered by the College of Osteopathic Medicine. It will also better prepare the students to fulfill future research requirements, such as those in the CORE (Centers for Osteopathic Research & Education) and/or residencies and fellowships. Published research has shown that early research exposure for medical students improves their future attitudes and interest in research (Ley & Rosenberg, 2007), increases their productivity as physicians (Zier, Friedman, & Smith, 2006), better trains medical students to critically assess medical literature (Guillory & Sharp, 2003), and can help to interest medical students in research and academic careers (Solomon, et al., 2003).

OST	OST	OCOM	8501	Defining Health Policy: History and Process in Government	SEM	EL	5	0		N	M60		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	CR, F	REQUISITE:
				COURSE DESC:	Both university faculty and actual policymakers participate in instruction. A workshop in the orientation week sets the definitions to be used and introduces the materials in the texts. The sessions are organized around: 1. State policymaking - the powers which reside in the state and processes used to set health policy. Material is presented by faculty, officials, and elected representatives from the state in which the meeting is held. Comparison and contrast to other states is included. 2. Executive branch government policymaking - the agencies, regulatory and research evaluation processes by which policy is generated and implemented for the administration defining their missions and illustrating their ability to impact policy. The sessions are organized by the American Association of Colleges of Osteopathic Medicine (AACOM) at its Chevy Chase, Maryland offices. 3. Federal legislative policymaking - the process and the players. A full-day workshop on the legislative process in Congress is offered by personnel from the training program for freshman legislators. University faculty present sessions on the history of health policy in government. The role of special interest organizations and methods for presenting policy solutions to policymakers are covered by national experts. Other material is included throughout the year on topics such as the role of values in health policy decisions, budgets as policymaking tools, how to influence your legislator, the growing presence of D.O.s in health policy, and the policymaking processes of the American Osteopathic Association. Evaluation: Participants build a policy agenda with government relations staff of the AOA and carry it to federal legislators and staff from their own state - then evaluate the sessions with the accompanying staffers.

Executive branch government policymaking - the agencies, regulatory and research evaluation processes by which policy is generated and implemented for the administration defining their missions and illustrating their ability to impact policy. The sessions are organized by the American Association of Colleges of Osteopathic Medicine (AACOM) at its Chevy Chase, Maryland offices. 3. Federal legislative policymaking - the process and the players. A full-day workshop on the legislative process in Congress is offered by personnel from the training program for freshman legislators. University faculty present sessions on the history of health policy in government. The role of special interest organizations and methods for presenting policy solutions to policymakers are covered by national experts. Other material is included throughout the year on topics such as the role of values in health policy decisions, budgets as policymaking tools, how to influence your legislator, the growing presence of D.O.s in health policy, and the policymaking processes of the American Osteopathic Association. Evaluation: Participants build a policy agenda with government relations staff of the AOA and carry it to federal legislators and staff from their own state - then evaluate the sessions with the accompanying staffers.

				COURSE DESC:	The issues to be included in each year's curriculum are determined by a curricular planning group which meets in July to plan the following academic year. Instruction is organized around set problems furnished to the Fellows at one session and resolved at the next. Key references are furnished and the program content is delivered by experts and policymakers intimately involved in the issue under discussion. Wherever possible, both sides of controversial issues are presented. Issues presented in the programs for a sample year are: Reform in Healthcare Entitlement Programs (state and national perspectives) The Healthcare Market move to Managed Car Determining and Controlling the Healthcare Workforce The Role of Regulation in Healthcare Economics of Healthcare Health Policy Issues in the Osteopathic Profession Preparing for an Increasingly Diverse Patient Population Follows are trained in problem-based learning in the orientation sessions. Groups of five meet with a faculty facilitator trained in small group facilitation. In the first session they read the case, identify the learning issues it presents, and make member assignments in preparation for the resolution of the case at the next session. They meet again to share their work at the opening of the following month's program and to decide what questions they will put to the presenters. (Presenters are furnished the case in advance). Finally, they meet to arrive on a solution and plan a presentation of their work. Evaluation: Faculty and Fellows critique presentation of the case resolution following each issue-based program. Presenters are evaluated by the Fellows and the feedback used to select the strongest faculty for the following year's program.

				COURSE DESC: The purpose of this rotation is to provide an opportunity for the student to explore issues in the delivery of health services in other countries. This rotation is not intended to transform the student into a specialist, but rather it is to provide a survey of the specialty. Students will need to use a logical and appropriate clinical approach to the care of patients in a developing country setting, utilizing locally available resources, and applying principles of evidence-based decision-making and problem-solving. These experiences are designed not only for students considering careers in international health, but for increasing the understanding of any future physician practicing in the United States who may care for patients from other countries. The experience is also designed to deepen the awareness of all participants regarding the determinants of health and illness and diverse methods of approaching health problems in settings with varied cultural, socio-economic and political characteristics. These experiences help students develop sensitivity to health disparities and their causes, including health, social, economic and environmental factors.

OST	OST	OCOM	8941	Scholarly Work - Required Paper	RSC	RS	2	0		N	M60		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	CR, PR, F
				COURSE DESC:	Students are required to work with the primary preceptor on an assigned service between December of year 3 and December of year 4 to select and approve an appropriate patient actually seen while on rotation as the basis for this paper. The selected patient case must lend itself to producing a paper that includes the usual components of a case report; the case must have some noteworthy appeal that would be valuable to a particular audience. Once the audience has been identified, the student must select a target journal as a potential venue for publication of the case report; it may be helpful to identify a few target publications and discuss these with the preceptor. The case report must then be written to conform to the submission guidelines and specifications of the specified target journal. An osteopathic component must be included in the manuscript submitted for grading.

Permission to participate must be given by the CORE Research Director and the Assistant Dean Clinical Education; the student must also be in good academic standing. This rotation provides a broad overview of critical review of literature via hands-on experience. In hospital and ambulatory settings (as appropriate), the student is expected to encounter a variety of experiences that may lead to a clinical question answerable through the conduct of an extensive and critical review of the literature. To achieve rotation objectives, the student is expected to apply research-based concepts of diagnosis and management to the patient, develop a working knowledge of both inpatient and outpatient treatment modalities, research design, understanding basic statistical results and interpretation, human subject protection, manuscript writing, and dissemination of research findings as means of contributing to evidence-based medicine. Throughout the rotation, students should have multiple opportunities to perform different aspects of a critical literature review and to practice problem-solving skills.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	CR, PR, F
				COURSE DESC:	The purpose of this rotation is to provide the student with the opportunity to develop or enhance his/her knowledge and skills to a level appropriate for a beginning researcher. To accomplish this, the rotation provides an opportunity to write a case report and submit it for publication. A case report is defined as an account of the signs, symptoms, diagnosis, treatment and follow-up of a patient that follows an unusual or noteworthy case presentation. A case report can consist of a single-case study or a multiple-case study (N<11). In hospital and ambulatory settings (as appropriate), the student potentially may encounter unique or rare illnesses/diseases or treatment and therapy. To achieve the rotation objectives, the student is expected to apply the concepts of diagnosis and management to the patient, develop a working knowledge of both inpatient and outpatient treatment modalities, be familiar with human subjects protection and its implication on collection of patient information, write the paper following a target journal's submission guidelines, and submit the manuscript for publication as means of contributing to evidence-based medicine. Throughout the rotation, students should have multiple opportunities to perform different aspects of scholarly work and to practice problem-solving skills. The student should enroll for the research rotation only after they have found an acceptable case to report; the rotation should not be used to locate a case to report upon.

				COURSE DESC:
				Comprehensive introduction to knowledge and skills required for successful human services work. Reviews the definition and basics of client care. Human service professionals serve individuals, families, groups, communities and/or other supported human services organizations. Human services basic principals and ethical standards, historical aspects, technology skills, job requirements, models of service delivery, client care, professional roles, working within delivery systems, and beginning skills in the helping processes discussed.
RHE	OUC	HST	1200	Crisis Intervention	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U20		0
				COURSE DESC:
				Provides theoretical understanding and skill-based training in assessment and intervention strategies that are solution oriented and that may be applied to a variety of crisis situations. Trains students how to respond to crises in a variety of settings with a diverse group of clients. Also designed to help students become proficient in crisis intervention skills.
RHE	OUC	HST	1500	Behavior Management	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U20		0
				COURSE DESC:
				Examines the application of behavior management principles and techniques used to help clients change or alleviate various human problems. Emphasis on learning to objectively describe, measure, and analyze behavioral data. Ethical issues in behavior management with clients discussed. Research, cultural differences, professional behaviors, and diversity of special populations in behavior management reviewed as well.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Students learn the definition and basics of human service, current issues, client service, and the helping relationship. Students practice human services intervention skills, learn information about ethical standards, historical aspects, technology skills, models of service delivery, theories of helping, special population client care in the helping processes, and practice motivational interviewing skills. Research and outcomes in intervention strategies, cultural and other diverse special populations and their differences in intervention strategies also discussed.
RHE	OUC	HST	1700	Group Dynamics	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U20		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Introductory course in group work practice that explores current theories and issues current in group dynamics. Objective is to acquire knowledge and practice skills which are necessary for group work. Emphasizes basic theory about groups and group process, demonstrates the skills necessary for effective practice, and gives the opportunity to discuss and practice these skills. Explores the history of group counseling, and current theories, principles, techniques of organization, leadership, and participation in group dynamics and processes. Actual group exercises that demonstrate the application of various theoretical models utilized. Discusses methods for implementing groups and outcome evaluation. Combines lecture and interactive learning experiences which facilitates self-awareness, group leadership, and small group participation.
RHE	OUC	HST	1750	Chemical Dependency	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U20		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Provides a perspective of chemical dependency intervention strategies, including theories of addiction and change, self-help support movements, assessment and diagnosis, continua of clinical care, legal and ethical standards of care, and stage-based therapeutic interventions. Dynamics and mechanics of substance abuse and chemical dependency discussed. Special populations and diversities as they relate to client care highlighted. Emphasis placed on understanding evidence-based treatment practices as defined by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) and the National Institute of Drug Abuse (NIDA).
RHE	OUC	HST	1900	Case Management	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U20		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Introduction to the philosophy, goals, and methods of case management and its roles in the fields of social and protective services, mental retardation/developmental disabilities, mental health, and corrections. Trains students in the basic aspects of assisting clients in case management jobs in the social service field. Definitions, responsibilities, communication strategies, and documentation requirements of case management taught.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	The course is intended to be a capstone course. The course centers around the theme that a company achieves sustained success if its managers (1) formulate an astute game plan (2) implement and execute the game plan with proficiency. The course will prove how and why doing an effective job of strategy formulation and strategy implementation produces good business performance. In studying the tasks of strategic management, the course will integrate the knowledge students have gained from previous courses. Strategic management requires dealing with many variables and situational factors at one time. The students will be able to weigh the pros and cons of what strategy entails: a total enterprise perspective and a talent of judging how all of the relevant factors add up to shape the actions needed to take place in a business.

UNC	MSC	MSC	2910	Leader's Training Course (LTC)	FLD	FE	4	0		I	U10		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F, CR
				COURSE DESC:	Leader's Training Course (LTC) is four weeks of intense classroom and field training held in the summer at Fort Knox, Kentucky. By transforming yourself through this rigorous training, you will qualify for enrollment in the Army ROTC Advanced Course. At LTC you experience the Army firsthand by developing your potential in the most important of ways-mentally, physically and emotionally. You will be grouped into squads where you will gain experience in all leadership roles-culminating in verbal and written feedback on your improvement. You will also receive a stipend, transportation to and from Fort Knox, housing and meals. The first phase begins with Physical Training (PT) and Drill and Ceremony (D&C) which instill self-discipline and prepare you for the rigors and challenges of the upcoming weeks. The second phase builds on the basics Cadets have learned by extending into adventure training in the field. Combat Water Survival Training, rappelling, land navigation and marksmanship training provide physical challenges that test Cadets individually while developing teamwork skills. In the third phase, Cadets learn squad-level operations by taking part in demanding field exercises.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Explores the theory of managing, group dynamics, and leading small military units with an emphasis on practical applications at the squad and platoon levels. Students will have a strong understanding of structure, process, and behaviors required of leadership. Examines various leadership styles and techniques as they relate to advanced small unit tactics and problem solving. Familiarizes students with a variety of topics such as land navigation, field craft, five battle drills, troop leading procedures, operations orders, risk management, and weapons systems. Involves multiple, evaluated leadership opportunities in field settings and hands-on experience. Students will also need to brief superior and subordinates on a wide range of topics. Students are given maximum leadership opportunities in weekly labs. A two-hour per week lab, three one-hour sessions of physical training a week, and a weekend field training exercise are required.

				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F, CR
				COURSE DESC:	The mission of the Leader Development and Assessment Course (LDAC) is to train U.S. Army ROTC Cadets to Army standards and to develop leadership and evaluate officer potential. This is accomplished through a tiered training structure using light infantry tactics as the instructional medium over a 28 day period. The Warrior Forge training program is sequential and progressive. It starts with individual training and leads to collective training, building from simple to complex tasks. This building-block approach permits integration of previously-learned skills into follow-on training. This logical, common-sense training sequence is maintained for each training cycle. Every day at LDAC is a day of training. Some of the major training events include the Army Physical Fitness Test, land navigation, weapons training, confidence building, and small unit leadership evaluations.
UNC	MSC	MSC	4010	Military Leadership, Management, and Ethics	LEC	LE	3	0		N	U30		0
				ELIGIBLE GRADES	A-F
				COURSE DESC:	Course develops future officers in many areas including leadership, personal development, values and ethics, officership, and tactics and techniques. The students will develop and execute training from beginning to completion to include reviewing for future improvement. Students will work on problem solving, career management, leadership development, ethics through scenarios, and the military decision making process. Communication will be a major focus in the areas of counseling, instructing, briefing, writing and evaluations. Students will learn about the military justice systems and administrative tools that can be used for discipline. Outside the classroom all of the areas will be developed through assigned duties in the Cadet chain of command as well as planning and leading the activities of the Corps of Cadets to include physical training, military science lab, and special events. A leadership lab, MSC 4010L, plus participation in three one-hour sessions for personal and organizational physical fitness are required.
