

Associate of Applied Science

Health Technology

---

Upon completion of the health technology major, students will:

- Acquire a basic knowledge in health and health sciences in relation to their specific areas and disciplines.
- Learn to respect and embrace diversity in the classroom and the workplace.
- Demonstrate computer competency and the ability to use tools and technologies in their respective areas.
- Demonstrate the ability to communicate effectively and will use methods that are appropriate to the content area, including oral, written, and graphic.
- Present information on careers in the field of health technology.
- Be able to distinguish how different health care professionals are integrated into the entire health care delivery system.
- Be able to explain the professional responsibilities for a myriad of health professionals and requirements for certification/licensure/registration of them.
- Develop and exhibit attitudes and behaviors appropriate for their respective professions.
- Develop a comprehensive resume of their practical and education experiences.
- Be able to discuss law and ethics in health professions as relevant to those in health technology careers.
- Have a basic understanding of medical law, legal system, malpractice, negligence, and standards of care for an array of health professions.
- Demonstrate an understanding of the availability, distribution, career path, educational requirements, and practice patterns of various types of health professionals.
- Explore job opportunities in health technology in the classroom and through experiential learning.