Academic Advising Philosophy

Academic advising is an educational process that facilitates students’ understanding of the meaning and purpose of higher education. It fosters intellectual and personal success development toward academic success and lifelong learning (NACADA, 2004).

Advisors in The Patton College of Education apply the theory of Appreciative Advising when working with students. This theory utilizes concepts to identify students’ personal and academic strengths to empower them to identify, optimize, and strive for excellence.

Student Commitment to Success

- Attend your advising appointments (on-time), or cancel if you are unable to attend.
- Be honest, timely, and open in your communication with your advisor.
- Contact your advisor as soon as possible, if you are experiencing a personal or academic difficulty that is interfering with your studies.
- Be an active and proactive participant in the advisement process by coming prepared to each appointment with questions or material for discussion, including plans and ideas.
- Be familiar about degree requirements, university policies, procedures, and campus resources.
- Actively manage your progress toward completing your degree by reviewing your degree audit report (DARS) in the MyOHIO Student Center.
- Regularly read your OHIO e-mail, and do not automatically forward to a third-party email (Gmail, Yahoo, etc.).
- Accept responsibility for your decisions and actions that affect your education and goals.
