

Jennifer Bard is a Professor of Law at the University of Cincinnati College of Law and a Professor of Medicine in the Department of Internal Medicine at the University of Cincinnati College of Law. She teaches a range of courses including Torts, Public Health Law and FDA Law. She has her J.D. from Yale, a Master's in Public Health from the University of Connecticut and a Ph.D. in Higher Education from Texas Tech University. She is active in a number of professional organizations including past chair of the American Association of Law Schools Section on Law, Medicine, and Health Care as well as Disability Law. Currently, she is part of the leadership group of the Ethics Section of the American Public Health Association.

Dr. Bard is a prolific and highly successful scholar in the disciplines of law, public health, and bioethics. She has published numerous articles and book chapters and frequently publishes op-eds in publications such as the Harvard Law School Bill of Health Blog, STAT, the Washington Post, and the New York Times.

Her research interests center around role of the U.S. Constitution in the health care system and the use of law as a tool for promoting a healthy, just, and fair society. Her most recent articles have looked at these issues in the context of inclusion of people with disabilities in human subject research, applying public health tools to the opioid overdose crisis, and developing standards for the ethical use of Artificial Intelligence in health care and other settings.

Before coming to Cincinnati, Dr. Bard held the Alvin R. Allison Chair in law at Texas Tech University's Law School and was a professor in the department of psychiatry at TTUHSC Medical's School and was a member of the founding faculty of the Julia Jones Matthews Department of Public Health at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC). Her first academic position was as an assistant professor at the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston where she was a member of the Institute for the Medical Humanities.

She has been a visiting scholar at Harvard Law School's Petrie-Flom Center for Health Law Policy, Biotechnology, and Bioethics and the O'Neill Institute for National & Global Health Law at Georgetown Law and a visiting professor at the University of Florida, Penn State University's Hershey Medical Center, the University of Iceland's Law Faculty, and in the LLM program at LaTrobe University in Melbourne, Australia.

Before entering academe, she was an Assistant Attorney General for the State of the Connecticut where she handled whistleblower, health care fraud, and public health issues.