

Oracle E-Business Suite (EBIZ) Delegation Methods

In this Quick Reference Guide approvers will learn how to set up delegates to approve Absence Management and Individual Compensation Distribution (ICD) transactions from their worklist, and delegates will learn how to access the approver’s worklist to approve transactions as a delegate.

EBIZ offers three options for delegation of worklist approvals:

1. Worklist proxies – Allows access to all worklist notifications for a specific period or indefinitely. Only the original approver will receive email notifications for transactions that require approval; the proxy will not receive email notifications regarding transactions that require approval. Either person may act on the transaction.
2. Vacation rules – Reassigns all your worklist notifications to your delegate for the specified period only. Only your delegate receives email notifications for transactions that require approval during the specified period and only the delegate may act on the transaction. Vacation rules is a temporary reassignment to your delegate. If there are specific transactions that you do not want your delegate approving during your absence, they should delegate those transactions back to you after you return (see delegation of individual transactions below).
3. Delegation of individual transactions – The approver may delegate individual transactions that they would like the delegate to review and respond to. Each transaction is manually delegated by the primary approver through this method.

Delegates set up through worklist proxies or vacation rules will have access to all the worklist notifications for that user. This includes transactions for both Absence Management and ICD. Users are responsible for ensuring their delegates know which transactions they are permitted to approve on their behalf. Employees are not permitted to approve their own requests.
