Leadership Foundations: Myers-Briggs Type Indicator | Morning Session

The Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) is an assessment tool intended to measure psychological preferences in how you perceive the world and make decisions. MBTI assessment consist of a series of questions, and your answers determine what type of personality you have based on the interplay of four major mental functions or components. There is no correct personality type or better way of approaching the tool; it is designed to offer insight, not judgement.

The results of your self-assessment will provide awareness on how to use your personality type for success in terms of career, communication, and social life. During the session, you will verify your MBTI results with a certified MBTI practitioner, learn strategy to leverage your personal personality strengths, discuss ethical decision making using type, and participate in several interactive exercises that highlight the difference between the 16 personality types.

Professional Ethics | Afternoon Session

Every leader must confront professional ethics. In the public sector, ethics address the fundamental premise of stewardship and the duty of public administrators. It is the moral justification for decisions made in the service of the government or nonprofit organizations. Professional ethic helps public servants to meet high standards of work and it also provides accountability to the public.

This session uses public sector case studies and discussion to explore how one’s response to difficult situations can be affected by varying (and at times conflicting) ethical considerations, including personal values, workplace responsibilities, anticipated consequences, etc. Building on these conversations, participants will be introduced to a tool that can be utilized to facilitate ethically informed critical thinking in their day-to-day decision-making.
